We recently saw a granite tile countertop, which we were told was less expensive than granite slab countertops. Other than looks, is there any reason why we shouldn't consider granite tile countertops instead of a slab countertop?

Dear Steve:

Providing that you understand and accept the limitations of such type of installation (grout lines, lack of edging choices, drop-in sink only, etc.), and providing that the installation is done right, there are no particular reasons why you shouldn't consider this less expensive alternative to a full slab work. The stone "no matter which one you will end up choosing" is always the same, whether in a slab form or tile.

Now remember, it's never too early to think about the proper maintenance of your stone. The issue of what you'll be doing day in and day out to your stone is "as it should be intuitive" vastly more important than its sealing (if and when possible and/or advisable) and it's all too often neglected. As you can tell by reading many of this site's postings, you're not likely to get good information about routine care from your dealer or installer. Don't become another statistic! By logging into the Helpful Hints section of our website at: http://www.mbstone.com/HH_promo/helpful_hints.htm, you will be able to get the short version of our maintenance guidelines at no charge.
