Hi Maurizio, We are trying to replace a white sink with an almond one that had already been attached to the granite countertop we purchased. What is the best way to separate the sink that is glued in place to the granite?

Dear Anne:

There's no sure answer to your question. It all depends what kind of adhesive they used: Silicone? Polymeric glue? Epoxy? Other adhesives? And then: are there metal supports to aid the glue (as there should be), and how are they anchored to the underneath of the stone?

You're only sure bet is to have the original installer do the job, or at least tell you what to do.

Now remember, it's never too early to think about the proper maintenance of your stone. The issue of what you'll be doing day in and day out to your stone is "as it should be intuitive" vastly more important than its sealing (if and when possible and/or advisable) and it's all too often neglected. As you can tell by reading many of this site's postings, you're not likely to get good information about routine care from your dealer or installer. Don't become another statistic! By logging into the Helpful Hints section of our website at: http://www.mbstone.com/HH_promo/helpful_hints.htm , you will be able to get the short version of our maintenance guidelines at no charge. The full version of it "a 7-page document considered by many as an industry benchmark" is available in pay-per-download format in our Educational Literature section at: <http://www.mbstone.com/literature/literature.htm> .

And remember, every single penny of the cost of the literature will be used to support this site and its cause: your cause.
