Hi Maurizio, I have been researching online about sealing granite. I have read in more than one place that only light granite needs to be "sealed" - I have light granite in all bathrooms, and black granite in the kitchen. I want to make 100% sure I do the right thing. Can you please counsel me on this? Thanks so much for your time!!! michelle

Dear Michelle:

While it is true that no black "granite" could ever be possibly sealed, it is not true that all light colored granites can be sealed. For instance, if the slab was resined by the factory, chances are that it will not take any additional sealer in.

How to know?

Do this:

Spill some water on a couple of spots of your stone, let it dwell for 5 minutes or so, wipe it dry and observe if the areas under which the water has been sitting have become (temporarily) any darker than the rest. If so, then you will apply a good-quality impregnating sealer. If not, you won't.

Now remember, it's never too early to think about the proper maintenance of your stone. The issue of what you'll be doing day in and day out to your stone is "as it should be intuitive" vastly more important than its sealing (if and when possible and/or advisable) and it's all too often neglected. As you can tell by reading many of this site's postings, you're not likely to get good information about routine care from your dealer or installer. Don't become another statistic!
