We are considering installing Benissimo granite tiles in Imperial Sage on the countertops in our kitchen. Is there anything I should know as a consumer? Are these tiles trustworthy and worth the money? After scanning your site I feel very hesitant about making a decision. Any knowledge on the subject will be appreciated. Thanks, Nina

Dear Nina:

If the Benissimo tiles are installed correctly I don't foresee any major problem. Off the top of my head, I don't remember if Imperial sage is a stone that can be sealed, but it will be easy for you to find out. Do this:

Spill some water in a couple of spots of your stone, let it dwell for 5 minutes or so, wipe it dry and observe if the areas under which the water has been sitting have become (temporarily) any darker than the rest. If so, then you will apply a good-quality impregnating sealer. If not, you won't.

Now remember, Benissimo tiles are indeed 100% natural stone and as such should be treated. The issue of what you'll be doing day in and day out to your stone is "as it should be intuitive" vastly more important than its sealing (if and when possible and/or advisable) and it's all too often neglected. As you can tell by reading many of this site's postings, you're not likely to get good information about routine care from your dealer or installer. Don't become another statistic!
